1. Executive Summary

The collection of numismatic literature in the Wadsworth Room has an appraised value of approximately $90,000. The value of individual items ranges from just a few dollars to $15,000. Two important sub-groups of literature relate to early U.S. copper coinage and world communion tokens. Recommendations include the deaccessioning of many shelf-feet of low value material, placing the collection in a logical order, and moving less valuable items from the Wadsworth Room to the reference and circulation stacks.

2. History

The numismatic literature collection in the Wadsworth Room was acquired via a transfer from The Carnegie Museum of Natural History. The literature had formed the reference library of The Coin Section of the Museum. When the bulk of the museum's coin collection was deaccessioned in the late 1970's, the reference literature was transfered to the Library, where it was placed on shelves in the Wadsworth room.

The collection was not in any strict order; whatever order had been imposed by the coin curators was partly lost during the move. The collection remained largely untouched until now; as part of this appraisal effort, some additional order was introduced, but there would still be several days of work required to completely order the collection.

Because of its ties to the Museum, the numismatic literature is a reflection of the old coin collection and the men who formed it. The collection was very strong in Ancient and World coins, as well as in Communion Tokens, and Early American Colonial and Copper Coins. These areas of strength are due to the nature of various donations to the collection over the years, and to the interests of the curators, whose research spurred additional donations to the collection.

William W. Woodside was the chief Curator for many years, and was largely responsible building a collection of national significance. One of Woodside's special interests was Communion Tokens of the World, and Carnegie Museum retains a very large collection of communion tokens, now on loan to the Presbyterian Society in Philadelphia.

George H. Clapp, a founder of ALCOA Corp, was an avid coin collector who specialized in early American copper coinage. Clapp donated a collection of these coins to the museum, and this collection also remains intact at the museum. Clapp authored or contributed to several major references on early copper coinage.

Both Clapp and Woodside were members of the Western Pennsylvania Numismatic Society (WPNS), founded in 1878. All major volunteer curators of the museum collection were WPNS members. Like Clapp, many carried out research projects through the museum. Ray Byrne wrote a reference on the coinage of the West Indes. Jack Burns resarched Prison Money, and wrote a comprehensive book on the subject. Gordon Dodrill wrote a book in Coal Company Scrip, and Duane Feisel wrote a book on Parking Tokens of the World.

Due to the efforts of these men, the Carnegie Library numismatic literature collection is very strong in books, catalogs, research notes, and correspondence in the areas of: Early American Copper coinage, Colonial coinage, Communion Tokens and Prison Money. Due to their strong connection with WPNS, the library collection is also very strong in items written by or formerly owned by WPNS and its members.

Many items carry the library markings of WPNS and members Byrne, Clapp, Mooney, Scaife, Schinkle, and Woodside.

3. Overview

This section describes various significant groups of material in the collection, and highlights selected individual items of note.

3.1. Research Notes and Correspondence

The collection contains nearly two shelves of notebooks containing original correspondence and research notes compiled by former coin curators. There are several volumes on Communion, Parking, and Prison Tokens. The book on Prison Money contains original correspondence from local and state officials around the country describing the money used in their prisons. Included are some letters signed by various state governors.

3.2. Antiquarian Books

The collection includes several fine antiquarian volumes, the earliest being Panoramus Antiqua, published in 1695.

3.3. Ancient Coinage

The collection includes a very extensive range of references on ancient coinage. Included are many expensive and useful reference works which many collectors need but few are fortunate to own. Examples are Roman Imperial Coinage, Cohen's Description Historique des Monnaies, and the Catalogue of Greek Coins in the British Museum.

3.4. Oriental Coinage

Oriental coinage is also very well represented with the references by Kann and Lockhart. A unique and valuable item is a handwritten manuscript by Valentine on Sassanian Coins (estimated at $1,000).

3.5. Great Britain and British Commonwealth

This is the single most extensive grouping in the collection, containing the largest number of individual titles. Regular issue coinage is represented, as well as tokens, medals, and paper money. The Atkins, Batty, Boyne, Conder, Davis, and Dalton & Hamer references are the standards for British copper token coinage. Rudding's Coinage of Great Britain (1840) and Burns' The Coinage of Scotland are also quite important.

3.6. Other World Coinage

Many other nations also represented. There are many references on the coinage of Canada, France, Germany, India, Spain, Mexico, and much of Latin America.

3.7. World Communion Tokens

Communion token literature is very rare and valuable. The collection has one of the most extensive groups of communion token titles anywhere. Many of the titles however, exist only as bound photocopies of the scarce originals. The collection is very valuable for reference purposes, but does not have a high dollar value.

3.8. U.S. Colonial and Copper Coinage

The literature on early American colonial and copper coinage is the highlight of the library. Most of the books were once the property of George Clapp, and contain his extensive annotations. These annotations are highly prized by collectors of copper coins and literature. Any item associated with Clapp in any way would bring a very high price if sold today.

For example, the collection includes a copy of Clapp's own 1931 book, The Cents of the Years 1798-1799. It is Clapp's leatherbound personal copy, one of only 10 deluxe editions made. Its estimated value is $4,000. Another book by Newcomb, The U.S. Cents of the Years 1801-1802-1803 is a presentation copy inscribed by the author to George Clapp. This volume is also estimated at $4,000. A notebook containing Clapp's own record of his cent collection, along with a book of photographic plates of the collection are estimated at $2,500.

Found in various places throughout the collection were several letters to Clapp from other well known copper collectors of the day. Such letters have brought as much as $500 apiece in recent auction sales. A folder containing the letters and other research notes by Clapp is estimated very conservatively at $2,500. The entire collection of U.S. colonial and copper coinage literature (which fills less than a single shelf) is estimated at over $20,000.

3.9. Periodicals

Periodicals form the second strongest area of the collection. The highlight is a set of The Numismatist, a periodical in continuous publication since 1888. The Carnegie Library has a complete set, and the first 28 volumes have been moved from the Reference Stacks into the Wadsworth room for protection. Only about a dozen complete sets are known to exist. The key to the set is the first six volumes. Carnegie's first six volumes have recently been rebound in full blue morocco leather, courtesy of bibliophile Armand Champa of Louisville. That single book is by far the most valuable item in the collection, and is estimated at $15,000.

3.10. Auction Catalogs

Auction catalogs are excellent tools for research, and the curators of the Carnegie coin collection accumulated a number of important catalogs, plus a large number of lesser items. Several of the catalogs are worth hundreds of dollars apiece. The most valuable item is something even knowledgable coin collectors would dismiss at first glance: a 1910 Thomas Elder catalog of the Moughey collection. The catalog would be worth just $20 but for the rare photographic plates contained in this copy; the estimated value is $1,250.

4. Recommendations

Appendix I maps the collection along two dimensions: dollar value to collectors, and value to researchers. The early U.S. periodicals are strong on both counts; they are of great use to researchers and are also of great dollar value. At the opposite end of the graph are items like newspaper clippings and price lists. These have little value either to collectors or researchers. The communion token literature is very high in research value since many of the titles are very rare, but is not worth a large amount of money due to the high number of photocopies.

Books belonging to categories in the upper-right section of the graph should be kept in the Wadsworth Room. These are the most valuable books in the collection. The small, but important group of antiquarian books is obviously in need of the climate control afforded by the Wadsworth Room. The U.S. Copper literature has direct ties to the magnificent Clapp Large Cent collection being held at The Carnegie Museum of Natural History; the books and coins complement each other and should be kept under the same roof, if not in the same room. The Communion Token literature has similar ties to the communion token collection at the Museum. Although not of great monetary value, the set of references as a whole is possibly the most extensive in the country, and should be kept intact at all costs.

Other items have a strong local Pittsburgh flavor, and should be kept together for posterity. The various research notebooks from the Carnegie Museum Coin Section are a unique record of the Museum's history of numismatic scholarship. Likewise, the many items originally belonging to the Western Pennsylvania Numismatic Society should be kept together out of respect for the society's contribution to the museum collection over the years.

Certain items can be immediately deaccesioned in order to free up valuable space. The biggest group of such material is the collection of 20th century auction catalogs produced by modern firms such as Stack's, Bowers & Ruddy, etc. These are difficult to use for research, and are easily purchased by serious collectors who want them; there is no good reason to keep them in the library.

After further study, selected high-dollar items can be deaccessioned without causing major damage to the collection as a whole. Examples include two of the plated Elder auction catalogs, and the Valentine manuscript on Sassanian Coins. These items are valued at $1,000 or more each, but have relatively little use to researchers.

The remainder of the collection falls into two groups. One group consists of runs of periodicals and selected books valued at over $50 each. These do not require the protection of the Wadsworth Room, but should not be made available for general circulation. The other group consists of lower-value items which can safely allowed to circulate.

4.1. Checklist

I recommend the following steps for further action:

1. Review the contents of the Reference and Circulating stacks. Which books should be moved or deaccessioned?
2. Deaccession the outright duplicates. There are only a few of these in the Wadsworth Room. Some multiple copies are listed in the Appendix. One example is the Catalog of the Glenn A. Mooney Collection of Indian Cents. Mr. Mooney is a former volunteer curator of the Coin Section. He does not have a copy of this item, and the library has two. One copy should be returned to him.

3. Deaccession the lower-value items (newspapers, price lists, clippings, pamphlets, modern periodicals, and modern U.S. auction catalogs). This group includes most of bookshelf #9, most of the boxes, and assorted other items. This will free up a good deal of space. The retail value of the items is about $750, but could be sold outright for only about 30% of that amount. They can be disposed through numismatic literature dealers, or donated to local clubs which could in turn sell the items to their members.

4. Put the remaining collection in better order. This will take a few days of work, but is necessary before further action can be taken. First, group books according to the major recommendation categories: Wadsworth, Reference, and Circulation. Next, seperate the obvious groupings such as Large Cent literature, Communion Token Literature, and Carnegie Museum Research Notes. Next, order within each group according to the Library of Congress classification system. Where the system is not detailed enough, consult Frank Campbell, the librarian at the American Numismatic Society in New York [(212) 234-3130]. Mr. Campbell has developed a detailed numismatic classification scheme which takes the Library of Congress system to much finer detail for numismatic references. Auction catalogs should be ordered according to Gengerke's American Auction Catalogs book.

5. Reorder the appraisal listing to reflect the new shelf order. This can be the basis of a catalog of the numismatic literature at The Carnegie Library.

6. Check the records of the Western Pennsylvania Numismatic Society to see which items formerly belonged to WPNS. A society member would probably volunteer to do this gratis. Work with the WPNS to decide what, if anything, should be done with such items. Should the museum keep them on behalf of the Society? Should they be sold or given to the Society?

7. Consider additional items to deaccession. Good candidates here are the foreign auction catalogs and a few of the more valuable selected items. The local numismatic community would probably support this action if part of the proceeds were put back into the care of the collection.

8. Construct book boxes for all the better items, particularly the Large Cent literature and the first volume of The Numismatist. These items should be protected from further damage.

9. Place all ephemera and correspondence such as the Clapp letters into 3-ring binders of Mylar sheet protectors. Create a listing of each item.

10. Make photocopies of the ephemera, and send them to the American Numismatic Society and American Numismatic Association libraries. Consider donating similar photocopy sets of selected items from the Carnegie Museum research notebooks, and the U.S. Copper literature collection. This is unique material, and the information should be protected from catastrophe by sending copies to remote locations.

11. Add mylar jackets to most of the remaining books. This will prevent further deterioration and rubbing of the covers. It will also provide a convenient place to tape call numbers without damaging the books themselves. Should the books ever be deaccessioned, they would be worth only about HALF as much with additional library markings. It is worth spending a few hundred dollars in order to prevent many thousands of dollars of possible damage.

12. Move the chosen books to the Reference and Circulation stacks.

13. Review the scope of the circulating numismatic literature. Solicit recommendations for additional titles to bring the collection up-to-date. Solicit donations of the required material. Local clubs and national publishers may be willing to donate the material or give to a fund for puchasing such material.

14. Publicize the collection. Prepare a pamphlet outlining the collection. Distribute it to local and national coin organizations, plus students and collectors of U.S. Copper coinage.
